DIVERTING STUDY ABROAD

By Megan Crepeau | REDEYE

Kate Rooney nearly didn't make it to Israel this month.

The 23-year-old was slated to fly there as part of a partnership between Northwestern, where she is a graduate student studying journalism, and the Jerusalem Press Club. But the area was so volatile that she and her fellow students weren't sure whether Northwestern would give her trip the green light.

"This program wasn't actually fully approved until the Tuesday before we left, and we left the following Monday," she said. "Every time there [was] a cease-fire, we were like, 'Well, maybe we'll go,' but then it didn't hold."

In light of heightened health and safety risks in global hot spots such as Israel, Ukraine and West Africa, local colleges must make a delicate calculation: whether the benefits of offering study abroad programs outweigh the risk of sending students to potentially dangerous locations. Students at DePaul, Knox and Michigan's Kalamazoo College recently have had their plans for foreign study suspended or modified due to safety concerns.

DePaul canceled its plans for a program in Sierra Leone because of the recent outbreak in West Africa of the deadly Ebola virus, according to GianMario Besana, associate provost for global engagement and online learning. A trip to Ghana is still in the works.

"DePaul will continue monitoring the situation and reserves the right to suspend the program in the near future," Besana said.

Northwestern, which last year suspended its Egypt programs indefinitely, does not plan to adjust any of the programs it currently offers in the Middle East.

"We work very hard to make sure all our travelers are well-informed," said Julie Anne Friend, director of Northwestern's Office of Global Safety and Security. "At the same time, we do a lot to facilitate travel. It's not our goal to keep people from locations, if at all possible."

Kalamazoo, about 150 miles from Chicago, recently suspended three programs: one in Israel and one in Kenya due to safety concerns, and one in Senegal due to Ebola.

"We're hoping to send students again next year," spokesman Jeff Palmer said. "We've had students in these countries for a long time, they're very immersive, students love them, but right now it's just not safe in those countries."

Three students from Knox College in downstate Galesburg had planned to study in

A spokesman for the University of Chicago said no foreign programs had been suspended there, to his knowledge. Representatives of the University of Illinois could not be reached for comment.

Rooney, the Northwestern graduate student, got back from Israel this week. Despite the ongoing violence in the region this summer, she said her study-abroad trip was a “once-in-a-lifetime experience.”

And despite hearing artillery fire and seeing U.N. peacekeepers on the border with Syria, she said she didn't feel less safe there than she does in Chicago.

“You're a little bit on edge, but in terms of everyday safety, I feel very safe over here,” she said from Israel. “The fact that Northwestern approved it gave me a lot of peace of mind.”

When you go to the wrong airport ...

Dana Moran

danamoran@tribune.com

When you've lived in Chicago for a while—six years for me—you start getting cocky. You can make a bus-to-train transfer with the grace of a swan, you know about the secret food court on the seventh floor of Macy's, you can (sort of) navigate the Pedway and you would never, ever go to the wrong airport.

Until one morning you do.

Pulling into O'Hare on the Blue Line only to realize my flight was leaving from Midway should've inspired the sheer panic usually reserved for a house centipede. Fortunately, I was so exhausted from waking up at 4 a.m. to get to O'Hare that my only reaction was one of those cartoon bubbles filled with Q*bert dialogue appearing above my head.

I now had about 90 minutes to make my plane.

Clearly, turning around and getting back on the "E" wasn't an option, so I scouted out a taxi stand while saying a wistful goodbye to the Rick Bayless breakfast sandwich I would no longer be consuming (queso and jam, always the queso and jam). It was still dark out when I greeted my cabbie.

Me: "So, I went to the wrong airport. I need you to take me to Midway."

Him: "Really? The wrong airport? I've lived here for four years and never had anyone do that. Man!"

Me (fortunately still in LOL mode): "I know, I'm an idiot."

Here's a reminder about Chicago's airports: They are not close to each other. At ALL. Midway is a full 30 miles from O'Hare, which equates to about 37 minutes without traffic. And though this all was going down at 6:15 a.m., Chicago isn't South Dakota, so of course there was traffic. Even my driver didn't realize the distance we'd have to cover. Him: "Wow, this is far!"

Me (no longer in LOL mode): "Yup. Yup, it is definitely far." *Watches meter racking up the dollars, dies a little inside.*

Under normal circumstances, there would've been the potential to go on standby and just wait for a later flight if I failed. But because I was on Frontier Airlines, which is about two steps above strapping myself to a bald eagle and crossing my fingers, the next plane out wasn't until three days later. (The bald eagle has better beverage service.)

With 40 minutes until takeoff, I guided my driver through less congested routes and prayed to Beysus, whom I normally only call on for relief from a particularly large zit, that the security lines would be short. Thankfully, she heard my plea. The scanners were a breeze, a very nice woman let me cut her in line and I dashed up to my gate seconds after the final boarding call. All it took was $77 and a couple of weeks off my life.

And of course there was a screaming baby sitting behind me on the plane.

DANA MORAN IS REDEYE'S FEATURES EDITOR. SHE WROTE THIS COLUMN DURING A FOUR-HOUR LAYOVER IN DENVER, WHICH ORIGINALLY WAS SUPPOSED TO BE 45 MINUTES BUT FRONTIER CHANGED THE FLIGHT SCHEDULE AFTER SHE BOOKED HER TICKET. NOT THAT SHE'S BITTER OR ANYTHING. ALSO, THEY CHARGE $2 FOR A BOTTLE OF WATER ON THE PLANE, WHICH IS CONSIDERED CRUEL AND UNUSUAL IN MOST FIRST-WORLD COUNTRIES.

Under normal circumstances, there would've been the potential to go on standby and just wait for a later flight if I failed. But because I was on Frontier Airlines, which is about two steps above strapping myself to a bald eagle and crossing my fingers, the next plane out wasn't until three days later.

UPTOWN'S UNCERTAINTY

SIGNS OF HOPE AS NEIGHBORHOOD STRUGGLES WITH VIOLENCE

By Rachel Cromidas | REDEYE

After more than 20 years living on North Magnolia Avenue in Uptown, Victoria McGhee had had enough.

"I felt like every time I hear gunfire, I have to run outside and check where my kids are," she said. "I can't get comfortable sitting on the porch."

In September 2013, McGhee, 40, and three of her four children relocated to South Shore. On Monday, her second oldest child, Christopher McGhee, 22, was shot and killed steps from his former home, in the 4500 block of North Magnolia Avenue, according to Chicago police.

"He was a hardworking young man trying to get his life together," McGhee said of her son, who she said was studying for a GED and working at a grocery store. "He loved his brothers and sisters, he was always there for them."

Christopher McGhee is survived by two sisters, 24 and 18, and a 16-year-old brother. On Tuesday evening, his mother attended her youngest son's high school football game, which he dedicated to Christopher.

"He would be at the game now," she said of Christopher McGhee. "He loved sports. He played basketball before work or after work. He went to the YMCA all the time. And he was just happy. It's hard to describe. Anybody that was friends with him says that he was walking with a smile."

This is not the first time Victoria McGhee has faced a family death due to gun violence. Two of her brothers were killed in Indianapolis about 15 years ago, one by a gang member, she said—an experience that left her acutely aware of the dangers of living in a community with gang violence.

Christopher McGhee had a pending felony drug case from winter of this year, according to Cook County court records. Chicago police also said he was a suspected gang member, but Victoria McGhee said that is not true.

"He was not perfect, but he was not a gang member," she said. The shooting underscores the neighborhood's need to address gang violence more seriously, Victoria McGhee said.

"He was meeting his friends who live over there," McGhee said of why her son was in Uptown on Monday morning. "He was at the wrong place at the wrong time."

About 11 a.m. Monday, a man exited a dark vehicle on Magnolia and opened fire—fatally shooting McGhee, according to Chicago police. Victoria McGhee and her family held a vigil for Christopher in Uptown on Wednesday evening, near where he was shot.

McGhee's death is the third homicide of the year for the lakefront neighborhood. Though Uptown is celebrated for its cultural attractions and affordable housing, the community has struggled to shake its reputation as a battleground for rival gangs. Still, some community members and public officials are hopeful that the North Side neighborhood finally is beginning to see the turnaround for which longtime residents have been waiting.

Uptown, sandwiched between Lakeview to the south and Edgewater to the north, has a history as a swanky entertainment district with venues, such as the Aragon Ballroom and Green Mill Cocktail Lounge, that still draw tourists. Close to the lake and the CTA's Red Line, it has a reputation for being more affordable than surrounding neighborhoods.

But long-standing concerns about violence that police officials largely say is caused by local gangs—including gang initiations, drive-by shootings and less severe “quality of life” crimes like public drinking and marijuana possession—have brought sporadic attention to the neighborhood's struggles.

Local crime data from the Chicago Police Department suggests that Uptown's turnaround already is underway. Though violent crime spikes during the summer in Uptown, as it does in most Chicago neighborhoods, year-over-year crime rates have decreased steadily since 2010, according to a Chicago Tribune analysis of police data. In July, 24 violent crimes were reported in Uptown, compared with 31 in 2013 and 38 in 2012—a rate that puts Uptown's safety on par with Lakeview's.

Uptown was marred by several shootings this summer, including a Racine Avenue drive-by shooting that left three wounded, and a separate fatal shooting, both in July. Uptown has had three homicides this year, compared with one by this time last year and six by this time in 2007. The beginning of a new school year brings with it the possibility of gang initiations, according to police officials, and not everyone says they feel safe.

Sean Battle, 38, is another longtime Uptown resident who, after nine years of living a stone's throw from Clarendon Park, started looking for a safer place to raise his family.

Battle was attracted to what he calls the “rough around the edges” neighborhood for its affordability and proximity to the park and the lakefront. But once his daughter was born in 2012, the occasional sound of what he per-sumed were gunshots became too much. His family moved to Lincoln Square this month.

“It's getting really bad,” he said. “I'm looking around and thinking, ‘Holy crap, I have a 2-year-old daughter,’ and it's to the point now where I won't take her to Clarendon Park.”

In the weeks before his move, Battle began using a camera phone to film what he perceived as an upsurge in gun violence from his

we were sitting right there. The park has the potential to be a great place, but there's too much going on.”

Ald. James Cappleman (46th) said that while violent crime is on the decline, his office is working with neighborhood groups to address remaining issues, for example by holding closed, task force-type meetings.

“The reality is that if any violent crime hap-apartment balcony, which overlooked Clarendon Park. A man was shot in the shoulder Aug. 24 in the park, according to Chicago police, who said the incident was likely gang related.

“I heard something like 10, 20 gunshots ring out in the park,” Battle said of incident. “I had a bird's-eye view.”

Jackie Keopphet, 22, who also lives by the park, said a bullet shot through a patio door window of her North Clarendon Avenue apartment just after 11 p.m. on June 14. “I was really upset about that and wanted to cancel my lease,” she said. “I had people over, pens in your neighborhood, it makes you feel unsafe,” he said. “Until parents feel comfortable with their child walking to school or the park without concerns about their safety, we still have work to do.”

He attributed the decrease in crime, particularly in hot spots like the corner of Sheridan and Lawrence avenues and the corner of Sheridan and Wilson avenues, to joint efforts by the 19th and 20th police districts and local neighborhood organizations.

The neighborhood's checkered reputation hasn't necessarily slowed down the real estate market, with median and average home prices rising in recent years at the same pace as the overall Chicago market, according to Chris Chesne, a North Side real estate agent.

“I even got a listing under contract one-and-a-half blocks away from the shooting at Wilson and Sheridan, two days after it happened,” he said. The buyer “was very aware of what was going on.”

He said the median home price in Uptown has jumped from around $191,000 in January 2013 to $236,900 in August of this year. According to data provided by the apartment listing website apartments.com, the average rental cost of a one bedroom apartment in Uptown and the neighboring community Andersonville has risen from $934 a month in 2010 to just more than $1,000 in 2013.

“It's a very attractive area for some people,” Chesne said. “There's a lot of draws to Uptown because it is less expensive. There's a lot to do. There's the Target on Wilson. It's close to the lake. Blocks of Uptown are part of the National Register of Historic Places.”

The neighborhood's strongest selling points—diversity, culture and location—should prevail over worries about violence, said D'Angelo Boyland, 27, a tenant organizer who has lived in Uptown for most of his life.

“I know a lot of people who travel where they want to. They don't have a fear of violence,” he said. “The fear that's been expressed to you is something that isn't true for the community as a whole.”

Victoria McGhee said she hopes her son's death will spur local police to “crack down” on neighborhood gangs.

“They've got to know where these guns are coming from,” she said. “Somebody is supplying these guns and that's where [police] need to start.”

Police commander indicted in gun case

Chicago Tribune

Minutes after learning of his formal indictment on misconduct charges, Chicago police Cmdr. Glenn Evans walked Thursday from the Leighton Criminal Court Building surrounded by more than 30 supporters who attempted to shield him from cameramen, photographers and reporters.

Evans' lawyer, Laura Morask, later said she will seek a speedy trial, confident of his acquittal.

"We do want to push this as fast as we can because we do believe that Commander Evans will not only be exonerated but vindicated," she said.

Evans, 52, was removed from his commander's duties at the West Side Harrison police district and assigned to paid desk duty at police headquarters after he was charged last month for allegedly shoving his service weapon down a man's throat. More recently, a Cook County grand jury has indicted him on two counts of aggravated battery and seven counts of official misconduct, all felonies, in connection with the incident in January 2013, according to court records.

At his last court appearance, the 28-year department veteran was allowed to leave the West Side courthouse through a rarely used exit, bypassing waiting media by the main doorway. But a sheriff's spokeswoman said a lieutenant who assisted Evans faced disciplinary action for violating department policy.

With that option closed, Evans showed up Thursday with a throng of supporters, who packed the courtroom for the brief hearing. As he left, the supporters provided a protective shield for Evans. He remains free on a personal recognizance bond.

In a federal lawsuit filed last week, the alleged victim in the incident last year alleged that he was waiting at a bus stop in the Park Manor neighborhood one afternoon when Evans, then commander of the Grand Crossing police district, pulled up in a squad car and stared him down for several minutes.

Unnerved, Rickey Williams, then 22, took off running, entering an abandoned house in the 7100 block of South Eberhart Avenue.

Evans called for backup and gave chase. He was joined by 10 other officers, according to the lawsuit. In the abandoned house, Evans tackled him, stuck the barrel of his service weapon "deep down" Williams' throat, held a Taser to his groin and threatened to kill him, prosecutors alleged.

A day later, Williams filed a complaint with the Independent Police Review Authority, which investigates police misconduct allegations. After the state police crime lab found Williams' DNA on Evans' gun in April, the review authority recommended that Evans be stripped of his police powers, but Supt. Gary McCarthy, who has praised Evans for his aggressiveness, left him in charge of the Harrison police district until he was criminally charged last month.

After court Thursday, Morask declined to give Evans' account of what happened in the abandoned house, telling reporters, "You'll hear it, if necessary, in court."

Morask said that she has subpoenaed the review authority's investigative file as well as other records from two investigators assigned to the case, saying she believes the agency "leaked" the DNA results to WBEZ radio, which first reported the allegations. She said she had also subpoenaed the station.

Records show Evans racked up 14 complaints from 2001 to 2006 and faced no discipline for any of them. He was also named in excessive-force lawsuits that the city settled for tens of thousands of dollars.

But Morask said the complaints and civil settlements bear "absolutely no relevance to this criminal charge."

"It was a rush to judgment, and I think you'll see that," she said of the charges.

No 'Obama College Prep,' but name is around

Chicago Tribune

Mayor Emanuel backed off Thursday from naming a new elite high school after President Obama amid ongoing criticism from African-Americans who felt the honor inappropriate for a school slated for a wealthy, predominantly white part of the Near North Side.

Instead of naming the new school after his former boss, the mayor indicated he would consider other names for the selective-enrollment high school set to be built near the site of the former Cabrini-Green public housing project just northwest of downtown.

Plenty of other things have been named in honor of the Chicagoan who is the 44th U.S. president:

1 An extinct lizard. Yale and Harvard scientists ran across the fossil of a slender-jawed, insect-eating lizard from Montana, and it was named Obamadon gracilis.

A chicken-and-waffle plate. The "Obama Special" at Roscoe's House of Chicken and Waffles in Southern California features one waffle and three pieces of chicken.

2 A species of spider. Professor Jason Bond of Auburn University named a new species of trapdoor spider Aptostichus barackobamai.

A baby tiger. Five rare white Bengal tiger cubs born at a zoo in Kernhof, Austria, were named Lali, Lela, Lila, Lulu and Obama.

3 A Kenyan baby. Millicent Owuor gave birth to twins in southwest Kenya on the day Obama defeated Mitt Romney and won re-election in 2012. She named one twin Barack and the other Mitt.

The highest peak in Antigua. Formerly known as Boggy Peak, the Caribbean height is now Mount Obama.

4 A street in Dar es Salaam, Tanzania. Formerly Ocean Road, it's now Barack Obama Drive.

More than a dozen schools around the U.S., and an elementary school in St. Paul, Minn., is named after both Barack and Michelle Obama.

Australian police: Raids foiled Islamic State plot

Militants connected with radical group Islamic State were planning to behead a member of the public in Australia, Prime Minister Tony Abbott said Thursday, after hundreds of police raided homes in a sweeping counter-terrorism operation.

Abbott said there was a "serious risk from a terrorist attack" days after Australia raised its national terror threat level to "high" for the first time, citing the likelihood of attacks by Australians radicalized in Iraq or Syria.

Australia is concerned over the number of its citizens believed to be fighting overseas with militant groups, including a suicide bomber who killed three people in Baghdad in July and two men shown in images on social media holding the severed heads of Syrian soldiers.

More than 800 police were involved in the pre-dawn security operation in Sydney and

NEW VIDEO THREAT

Islamic State militants fighting in Iraq and Syria released a video Thursday that they said shows British journalist John Cantlie in captivity saying he will soon reveal "facts" about the group to counter its portrayal in Western media.

Brisbane, which was described as the largest in Australian history and resulted in the detention of 15 people, police said.

Abbott told a news conference that members of the radical group had planned to conduct a public beheading.

"That's the intelligence we received," he said.

Media reported that the plans included snatching a person at random in Sydney, Australia's largest city, and executing them on camera draped in the group's black flag.

Polls close in Scots' independence referendum

Scotland voted Thursday on whether to stay within the United Kingdom or declare independence to break the 307-year-old union in a finely balanced referendum with global consequences, but the verdict wasn't clear by press time.

Suspect in Penn. police ambush on FBI wanted list

The FBI on Thursday added the suspect in last week's ambush of two Pennsylvania troopers to its list of the 10 most wanted fugitives. Eric Matthew Frein, 31, of Canadensis, Penn., is suspected of killing one officer and wounding another.

3 car bombs, mortars kill 23, wound more than 50 in Baghdad

Three car bombs were detonated in adjacent Shiite Baghdad neighborhoods Thursday followed by a dozen mortar rounds, killing at least 23 people and wounding more than 50, security and medical sources said.

MARSHALL SPEAKS

Bears receiver holds court about his troubled past

Chicago Tribune

As is often the case, Brandon Marshall felt an urge to speak out.

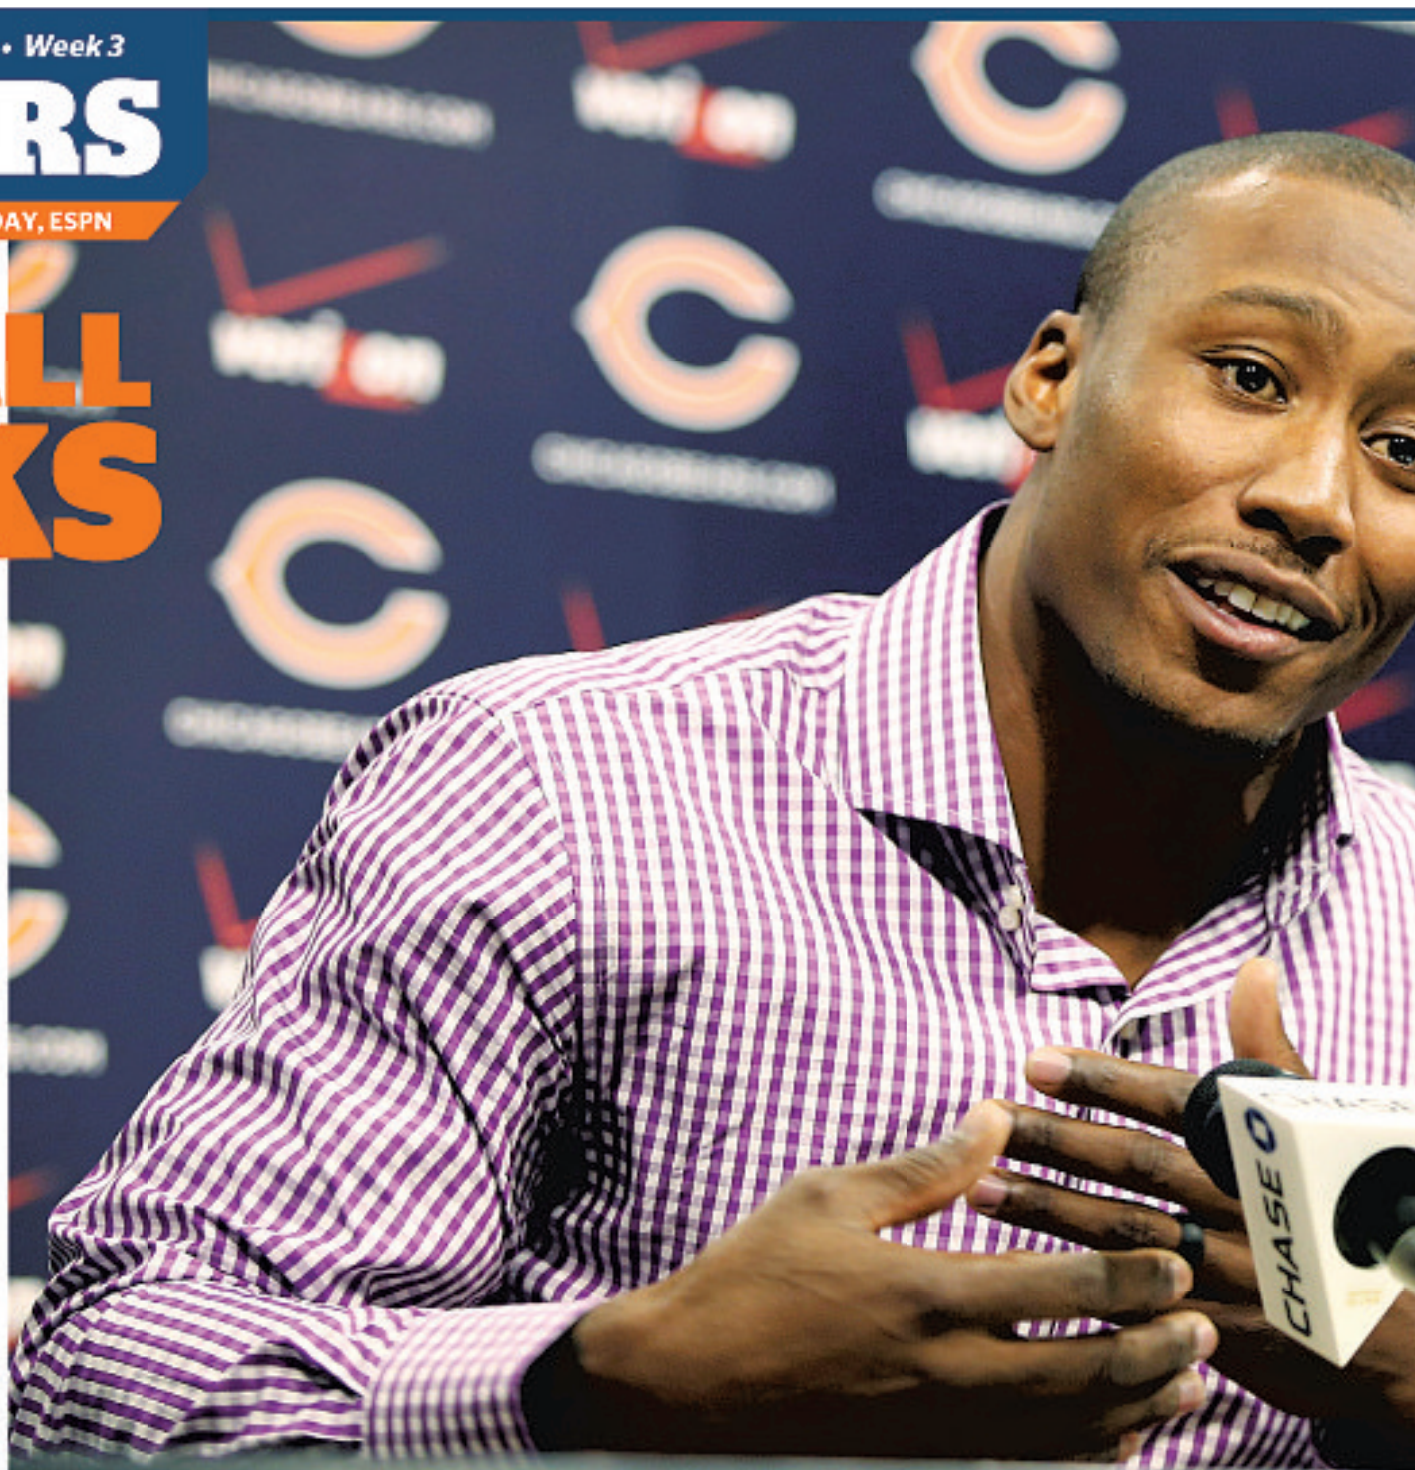

With his league spiraling through an unprecedented month of crisis and his own troubled past being dragged into the conversation, the Bears receiver insists deeper societal discussions are necessary.

For weeks now, the NFL's on-field product has had to cede its spotlight to the sobering coverage of players embroiled in domestic violence and child abuse controversies.

Ray Rice has been suspended indefinitely from the league after an incident in which he punched his then-fiancee, now wife, in an elevator. The Panthers have Greg Hardy's ongoing domestic assault proceedings hanging over them. And the Vikings have banned running back Adrian Peterson from team activities this season as the legal process in his disturbing child abuse case plays out.

Marshall, meanwhile, knows he was once the player creating the negative headlines, plagued earlier in his career by his own history of domestic violence. Those transgressions have been exhumed this week in various ways.

Rather than run from his difficult past, Marshall had a 40-minute news conference Thursday at Halas Hall to discuss everything from his rough childhood to his beef with ESPN to his reaction regarding Gloria Allred's Wednesday news conference in Atlanta when she used Marshall's violent relationship with a former girlfriend as a means to attack NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell.

HOW WE GOT HERE

Brandon Marshall was selected by Denver in the fourth round of the NFL draft. Since then he has been named to the Pro Bowl five times, including three years with Jay Cutler as his primary quarterback; two of those seasons came with the Bears.

But amid those accomplishments are a number of arrests since October 2004, ranging in nature from retail theft to driving under the influence to domestic violence. He has never been found guilty of domestic violence, though he has been punished by the NFL for his alleged conduct off the field.

MARCH 26, 2007:

Marshall was arrested in a Denver suburb on suspicion of domestic violence of then-girlfriend Rasheedah Watley. Marshall completed anger management counseling and the charges were dropped two months later.

MARCH 6, 2008:

Marshall was arrested on charges of misdemeanor battery in Atlanta after a dispute with Watley. She told police he punched her in the mouth and eye. Marshall said he cut his hand on glass.

USA TODAY SPORTS FILE

AUG. 6, 2008:

Roger Goodell (left) suspended Marshall for three games for violating the league's personal conduct policy. The suspension was reduced to one game and a fine.

MARCH 1, 2009:

Marshall was arrested in Atlanta on disorderly conduct charges after allegedly being involved in a dispute with then-fiancee, Michi Nogami-Campbell (right), now his wife. Charges were dropped the next day.

QUOTES FROM THE CONFERENCE

Here are the highlights of what Brandon Marshall said Thursday in a news conference at Halas Hall to address his history and the NFL's domestic violence issues.

On the rough childhood that shaped him: "I grew up in a house, better yet an environment, a neighborhood where it was volatile. There was domestic violence. My mother was not only physically abused and mentally abused, she was sexually assaulted. And I didn't understand it at the time when I was a child. I didn't understand it until I was at McLean Hospital and I was dealing with my own issues that my mom was depressed. My mom was isolated. My mom was an alcoholic. I grew up and I saw a lot of pain in my mom's eyes. I saw a lot of suffering. And the scariest thing was how my mom was isolated for years. I didn't know what that was. I thought my mom was just a mean person at times."

On the issue of physical discipline for children in light of the accusations facing Vikings running back Adrian Peterson, who's accused of beating his 4-year-old son: "I'm not going to raise my children that way. Because I think there's a better way I can't wait for my son and my daughter to start arguing. And that's an opportunity for me to sit them down and say, 'Let's talk about it. I want you two to talk about it.' Because right then I'm going to be teaching them that this is how you communicate. This is how you deal with conflict. It's not about being violent or yelling or screaming. But I was whooped. My grandmother whooped me with an extension cord. She whooped me with a switch. ... So I just think that everyone's points and views on things are a little different."

On his reaction to attorney Gloria Allred's news conference earlier this week: "I would love to see how much money she donated to some of these causes. Because she has a powerful voice. I would love for her to use that voice and use that influence to really help so many people who are out there struggling. And not use it as an opportunity to brand herself and to create a circus. There are so many amazing groups out there that are speaking right now and doing some amazing things. But you have something like that that kind of overshadows it all. So I was a little disappointed."

On why the discussions of these serious issues need to occur more frequently: "It's serious. There are some alarming things that are out there. And like I said, it's not an epidemic in the NFL. It's really an epidemic in our world. So I would just say to just pay attention. Because the more we talk about it, the more people are going to heal, the more healthy conversations are going to get started and we'll begin to see things change."

On why he was upset with ESPN for its updated "E:60" profile on him earlier this week: "There are certain things where if you get defensive, if you speak your mind, you're going to be judged and you're going to make yourself look worse. For six or seven years I've sat back and accepted my part in everything that I've done, everything that I've been a part of. And I've listened to representatives say, 'Listen, you can't win this one.' And you can't. There's no need to try and win it. But I refuse to sit back and continue to let ESPN or any other network or outlet exploit my story."

On his support for NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell after meeting with him this summer: "I just wanted to use the NFL's platform to push my agenda and my cause. ... When we sat down and met, it was interesting, because there were probably 10 people in the room and we were talking about systems and programs and how we can help our guys. How can we implement different things? And what did I do to change my life? And at the end after four hours sitting there with them, talking about all these cases, he kicked everybody out of the room and it was just me, him, [NFL executive vice president of football operations] Troy Vincent and a clinician. [Goodell] had tears in his eyes. He said, 'Man, how can I help Josh Gordon? How can I help Davone Bess? How can I help these guys? We have this Ray Rice situation.' He really was concerned. He really cared."

GETTY IMAGES FILE

MAY 2009: ESPN aired an "Outside The Lines" report chronicling Marshall's past and alleged abuse of Watley.

AUG. 14, 2009: Marshall was found not guilty on the battery charges from the March 2008 arrest in Atlanta.

OCTOBER 2012: ESPN's "E:60" newsmagazine aired a story on Marshall that deeply chronicled his arrest record and experiences with domestic violence.

SEPTEMBER 2014: "E:60" aired a slightly updated version of the 2012 story on Marshall.

Allred (from right), Clarence Watley and Spivey CPA

WEDNESDAY: Attorney Gloria Allred (from right), appearing with Watley's father and friend of Watley's, held a news conference criticizing Goodell and how the NFL handles domestic abuse incidents.

1	How are we supposed to figure out the Bears this season?	Buffalo hasn't gotten back to me yet. Give me a minute.	Stick your finger in your mouth then raise it to the sky and figure out which way the wind is blowing.	Shoot craps.	Oh come on. It's all part of their charm. Right? Sigh.	Take whatever you think you know and throw it out. We're all guessing at this point.
2	Waiting until Monday for a Bears game is ...	... delaying my weekly hangover to Tuesday.	... much easier if you set your watch back 30 years.	... like waiting for the fifth season of "Game of Thrones" to start.	... like still looking forward to dessert, even after a 12-course meal of lesser football—I mean, food.	That's two Sundays in a row I've had my days free. You guys know about this church thing going on?
3	When will Northwestern football finally get a win this season?	Hmm, that's a tough one. When do they play Purdue?	Hey, it's 1984 so I don't expect much.	When the other team forfeits or when the Illini take the field. Whatever comes first.	When fans/media/people in general stop paying attention to them. Per usual.	They need to play a bona fide patsy for that to happen. Home against Illinois, Nov. 29.
4	When an umpire gets suspended, he's hogging the spotlight, right?	Absolutely. How is ESPN supposed to have time to discuss him, Ray Rice AND Adrian Peterson?	Joe West should have got far more than one game. Jackass.	Now, the ump is only doing what they do best, making a name for themselves.	When you're as hated as Joe West? You'll do anything to stay relevant.	Joe West doesn't hog the spotlight. His jowls do.
5	What does Kyle Fuller get for being named Defensive Player of the Week?	A pat on the back and the start on Monday night.	The NFL now gives out a $100 gift certificate toward a future criminal defense lawyer.	A five-wing dinner from Shark's. With lemon pepper.	He gets to rub it in Ndamukong Suh's face. Oh and honeys. Lots of honeys.	He gets to be a starting cornerback for the Bears! That's what a first-rounder does!

SHOOT HOOPS, NOT GUNS

NBA stars fight Chicago violence with basketball game at local church

By Bryan Crawford | FOR REDEYE

It all started with a walk through the hood.

Father Michael Pfleger, head of St. Sabina Parish on the South Side, and Isiah Thomas, a West Side native and NBA legend, tell the same story in slightly different ways.

However, both agree that after a late-night march through the city streets and talking to people affected by drugs and gang violence on a daily basis, something needed to be done. That's how the Peace Tournament came to be.

On Saturday, St. Sabina will play host to the third annual event that pits members of rival gang factions from different areas of Chicago against one another in friendly yet highly competitive games of basketball. Although many of the players may be at odds with one another on the street, inside the Ark of St. Sabina gymnasium the environment is just as the name of the tournament suggests.

"It's hard to have a beef with somebody that you know," Pfleger said. "Since we've held this tournament there have been no incidents. There has been no violence. We want to let these brothers know that we care about them and their ability to succeed in this world. Basketball is just the hook."

"When we held the first tournament, the kids had to be bused in separately because we wanted to avoid any incidents caused by them crossing the boundary lines signifying someone else's territory," Thomas said. "Now, some of these same guys carpool to the games together. It's a result of being in a positive environment and building relationships with people that you wouldn't have a chance to otherwise."

Adding to the gravity of the Peace Tournament is the involvement of Bulls superstar Joakim Noah. The two-time All-Star is heavily involved with the event and is also active in the community and the city that serves as his adopted hometown. His support adds to the credibility of the event and attracts other NBA players. Guys like Taj Gibson, Will Bynum, Jabari Parker, Bobby Simmons and Englewood native Derrick Rose have all come out and lent their time, voices and support.

"Star power works when it comes to getting people's attention and sending a message," Pfleger said. "When we first put the plans for the tournament in motion, Joa-kim reached out to us. Here's a kid who is the son of a famous tennis player and even though he was raised in New York City, he said he really didn't understand the complexities of the gang problem in Chicago. But he offered to help and he's been really committed.

"Joakim has given guys tickets to Bulls games and met with some of them afterwards and took them back to the locker room. There was also a documentary filmed on the tournament and Joakim spoke about it during the All-Star Game. His direct involvement has been as impactful as anyone's."

"When NBA players show up and spend time with these kids, their impact is tremendous," Thomas said. "Anytime these guys can actually see the people they watch on TV in person and be able to talk to them and touch them, it creates unforgettable moments in their lives. It also gives them a sense of hope that these guys actually care about the things going on around them and they want to help."

IMPRESSIVE ROSTER

Among the participants in Saturday's Peace Game at St. Sabina Church will be these current or former NBA players:

- » Joakim Noah
- » Derrick Rose
- » Isiah Thomas
- » Jabari Parker
- » Craig Hodges
- » Antoine Walker
- » Jannero Pargo
- » Zach Randolph
- » Will Bynum
- » Jeremy Pargo
- » Bobby Simmons

Help off the court

The Peace Tournament isn't just about basketball. Many of the participants receive help in getting their GEDs and pursuing job opportunities. Some have even gone on to college with the help and support of Father Michael Pileger and his staff.

3RD ANNUAL PEACE GAME

When: Noon-5 p.m. Saturday
Where: St. Sabina Church (7800 S. Racine Ave.)
The tournament is free and open to the public.

There are four former participants who serve as full-time peacemakers in the streets, working to diffuse situations before they escalate. Pileger, who lost an adopted son to gun violence in 1998, said he and his parish have an obligation to help.

"Churches occupy land that it doesn't have to pay taxes on and the membership is made up of the people who live in the community," he said. "Therefore, we have a responsibility to make an impact and help them in any way we can."

Bears brain teaser

By Mick Swasko | REDEYE

Welcome to Bears Brain Teasers 2014, where we challenge skills you thought were useless once you left elementary school.

Jay Cutler loves to pass. It's Matt Forte's job to run. For this week's question, they'll work together. Here's the scenario:

A race course is plotted for Forte. It's the exact length of Cutler's career passing yards through Week 2's win over San Francisco. Assuming he runs his top speed the entire time, how long will it take Forte to reach the finish line? Round up to the nearest second.

How fast can Forte run, you may ask? Well, that's officially on the NFL's books; you just might have to COMBINE some brain cells to figure it out.

HOT DATE

SEPT. 27

That's when the White Sox will honor retiring captain Paul Konerko (above) with a special pregame tribute, before the team plays Kansas City. The ceremony will include special guests and video tributes.

More Tara. More Johnny. More outfits.

After their work at the Sochi Olympics drew widespread praise, Tara Lipinski and Johnny Weir have been promoted to be NBC's primary figure skating commentators, according to Tribune sources familiar with the situation. Lipinski, the 1998 Olympic champion, and Weir, a three-time U.S. champion, will be teamed with Terry Gannon, as they were at the Olympics. A little more than three years until Pyeongchang 2018!

'Maze Runner' stars battle on screen, bond off of it

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Dylan O'Brien, Will Poulter and Kaya Scodelario are racing through a maze. Who comes out first?

"Dylan," O'Brien's "Maze Runner" co-stars blurt instantly.

"Because he's, like, all-American-sports-perfect, fast, clever ..." Scodelario, who is English, continues at the James Hotel. "We just drink beer in pubs."

"Have you seen the kid leap? He's a hell of a leaper," London-native Poulter adds.

The kid is, in fact, quite the jumper. In "The Maze Runner," opening Friday and adapted from James Dashner's dystopian novel, Thomas (O'Brien) leads a crew of terrified teens, including Teresa (Scodelario) and Thomas' rival Gally (Poulter), who have been dropped into a maze. Their only way out: solve the puzzle, which involves scaling walls, battling cyber-spiders known as Grievers and, naturally, lots of running.

After sitting with you for a few minutes, I feel like the three of you have a pretty good rapport. Was it weird to have to have conflict between your characters on set?

Dylan O'Brien: Yeah. It's acting, you know; I think we did a really good job with it. ... We all had such a really good balance of, like, having so much fun naturally, like we do with one another, loving one another like we do, and then being very serious about the work.

Will Poulter: [to Kaya Scodelario] It is weird to think about how like the only dialogue that we have between each other is me telling you to shut up, and you telling me that I'm a ...

KS: Yeah, I know, it's weird. I forget that all the time.

WP [to DO]: And then me and you, just punching, pushing, all this stuff, and then off-screen ...

DO: It's like hugs and kisses.

Did you do all that fighting yourselves, or did you have stand-ins?

DO: No, all of the fighting was us.

Did anybody get knocked around a little too much?

WP: Dyl got beat up pretty bad.

DO: Just all the time.

WP: I mean, not by me ... sorry ... I kicked his ass. No, but with the physical stuff, Dyl really committed to it and went at it, and he was kind of like 100 miles an hour the whole time.

I could really tell. When you whacked your

Young men, trapped at an undisclosed locale, investigate the mysteries of a massive maze in "The Maze Runner."

Dylan O'Brien in "The Maze Runner"

head on the ground, I was like, "Oooo, that looked like it hurt."

DO: I had to do that so many times. I remember at one point the [director of photography] like apologizing to me because he was getting very upset with himself not getting the shot. I was fine; that's what I'm there to do. But then at one point too, I was like "All right, yeah ..."

WP: "... I'm gonna get a concussion." But he never did a soft take. Like, he never did like a soft one. Every time, Dyl did like the full frickin' thing.

And when the Grievers were chasing you, did they have someone in a scary suit following you, or was it just you having to react to nothing?

DO: It depends. When it was the Grievers chasing me, I can kind of create where it was gonna be I guess. There would be a basic template of, "OK, we're gonna do this shot now where we have you come around the corner and then you're blocked, you turn around, it comes around the corner, and then you choose to go this way, you gotta go this way." But if I did a movement or something they could add in a Giver just missing me or something like that—you can kind of create what happens in the scene. There were times, though, when we had to actually be making contact with it. We had two dudes, two stunt guys, head-to-toe in blue suits, and they had shields and polo sticks and we were like fighting them.

Yeah, 'cause I can't imagine having that thing actually come at me.

DO: They actually had real Grievers on set, actually trying to kill us. It was actually very terrifying.

KS: They're in the zoo now.

WP: Zoo or time off.

DO: Yeah. We go visit them sometimes.

"Hey!" [Makes monster noise.] "Oh, stop it, you cutie."

Did you find that you had nightmares about them afterward, having seen the movie and that chasing you?

WP: They're terrifying. I'm slightly worried about our younger audiences; they are really scary.

DO: I'm worried too.

KS: I know. I told my little cousins they could watch it, and I feel like I shouldn't let them now.

Dylan O'Brien in "The Maze Runner"

Two activities in "The Maze Runner"—fighting to stay in a circle and considering climbing a very tall wall—reminded me of "American Gladiators," which made me think of "American Ninja Warrior," which makes me wonder how long it will be until that show is turned into a movie.

Hollywood is starved for ideas, and these YA adaptations can't last forever. Can they? They can't. Please.

Until then we have "The Maze Runner," the year's 5 billionth movie of its kind that's guaranteed to be neither the best nor the worst movie you've ever seen. Resist urges to call this tale of a youth society struggling to survive "Bored of the Flies." I wasn't bored. Or engaged. Like too many big-screen treatments of best-selling dystopian novels, you half-watch it while thinking about when fall TV comes back and what to eat for dinner. When the big secret's revealed, you don't gasp and drool until the sequel arrives. You say, "Oh, OK," unsurprised and uninspired. Side note: Are people still saying "meh"?

That's not Dylan O'Brien's ("Teen Wolf") fault. He's solid in his first starring role as the courageous Thomas, who wakes in a moving metal box with no idea of who he is or how he got there. He's delivered to a contained world of young men who fear the maze that confines them and the robotic alien bug things (called Grievers) that dwell within. When one resident tells Thomas, "Welcome to the glade," I expected him to add, "bitch." (There are a few times when the movie vaguely resembles "The Shawshank Redemption" translated to "The O.C.")

The Maze Runner

The only major question is what's up with this maze, and first-time feature director Wes Ball, adapting James Dashner's book, parcels out few tempting morsels. What in its first moments recalls the awful Canadian sci-fi flick "Cube" quickly switches to aspects of "The Hunger Games: Catching Fire" with some "Ender's Game" thrown in. As the first and only girl delivered to the group, English actress Kaya Scodelario is too focused on maintaining an American accent to make Teresa into anything. Will Poulter is better as Gally, who blames Thomas for the mayhem that ensues after his arrival.

It's nice that "The Maze Runner" isn't humorless. It has a laugh or two and a little excitement despite average-looking monsters and the maze itself being pretty dull. Too bad the characters remember so little, as memories of "Labyrinth" might help turn "acceptably blah" into "actually fun."

Adam Driver (from left), Corey Stoll, Tina Fey and Jason Bateman in 'This is Where I Leave You'

Of the few truths depicted in the bland, R-rated family comedy "This is Where I Leave You"—other than "emotions are hard" and "man, emotions are hard!"—two are that Adam Driver ("Girls," "Inside Llewyn Davis") should be a bigger movie star and Tina Fey should be a smaller one. Look, she's hilarious. I loved "30 Rock," and "Date Night," which also starred Fey and was directed by "TIWILY" helmer Shawn Levy, is really underrated. But her latest movie re-confirms that Fey can't swing it as a dramatic actress, and after a couple of attempts (including the painful "Admission"), this is where I leave her.

Yet much of the problem with "TIWILY" is that the script, adapted by Jonathan Tropper from his novel, sounds like people reading from a book, not real people talking like real people. "Love causes cancer like everything else," Wendy (Fey) tells her brother Judd (Jason Bateman). "But it's still love." Yeesh. That's not the worst of it. The worst is repeated gags about mom's (Jane Fonda) breast implants and Wendy's young son who frequently uses a portable toilet.

If your movie stars Jason Bateman and Tina Fey and you need to rely on jokes about poop and a 76-year-old's fake boobs, you have a problem.

This is Where I Leave You
R

The plot's a standard tale of returning home following a death. Many brawls ensue because no one can keep a secret or get along. Youngest sibling Phillip's (Driver) a screw-up, and eldest brother Paul (Corey Stoll) is kinda jerky. Judd's wife (Abigail Spencer) cheats on him, but the woman (Rose Byrne) who had a crush on him as a kid still is available. Everyone constantly analyzes themselves and refuses to stop saying how everything is complicated. It's annoying; even more so than the shrill "August: Osage County."

Any successes arise from Bateman's deft hand at both comedy and nuanced feeling, Driver's charisma and, in a too-small role as Phillip's girlfriend, Connie Britton proving she should get starring parts too. Something happens with their characters that doesn't with the others. You care.

Still, the movie feels rehearsed when it should move. Its messiness is too organized. It's only sort of about if or how to separate; "This is Where I Leave You" mostly is a vague title, implying meaning without delivering it. That's something you can't say about "The Royal Tenenbaums" or "Arrested Development."

You easily could take the premise of "Tusk" as a joke. Over the closing credits we hear writer/director Kevin Smith laughing about the idea on his podcast, where it originated. Yet—and you may think I'm taking a sometimes-funny and always-bizarre thriller about a man being turned into a walrus too seriously—the intense, disturbing movie isn't a "Human Centipede"-esque stunt. With his second consecutive thriller ("Red State"), Smith comments on a society he thinks no longer reacts, other than by pointing, laughing and not thinking. He's challenging us to prove him wrong.

Wallace (Justin Long) is the kind of a-hole Smith's addressing. For a hit podcast with his pal Teddy (Haley Joel Osment), Wallace interviews unusual folks, without sympathy. His latest target is "The Kill Bill Kid," an unfortunate young man who becomes a viral video sensation after accidentally cutting off part of a leg with a sword. When Wallace arrives in Canada, he learns the guy's killed himself, which Wallace sees only as a major inconvenience to himself. He needs a new hook for next week's show. Above a urinal, he spots a letter, handwritten in cursive, offering to share stories of adventure at sea. The Web host doesn't think it's too good to be true; his thoughts more frequently focus on saluting his own success and cheating on his girlfriend (Genesis Rodriguez).

Obviously, Wallace learns too late that Howard Howe (a very creepy Michael Parks), who wrote the letter, shouldn't be trusted. Yet this guy isn't explicitly punishing a specific person for taking life for granted—a good thing, since the world really, really doesn't need another "Saw." Howard's simply a traumatized, mentally ill person who thinks humankind has long been plagued by the question: "Is man indeed a walrus at heart?"

Smith muddies his tone with a Quebec detective (I'd rather not say who plays him) and loses Wallace's perspective as the movie turns into a race to rescue its main character. There are a few needless fart- and poop-related jokes, of course. Yet the still-developing filmmaker's restraint here isn't just evident in declining to use the Beatles' "I Am the Walrus." Without scolding, he eerily dares viewers to step outside mocking indifference and question human cruelty with a movie that's flawed but refreshingly strange. It will make most other horror movie victims say they got off easy.

THIS WEEK'S TOP RELEASES

Neighbors

This raunchy comedy stars Seth Rogen and Rose Byrne as married parents of a newborn and Zac Efron as their new next-door neighbor—the deceptively friendly president of a party-happy fraternity. The premise is mainly just an excuse for talented young comic actors to gather and trade profane insults and crazy pranks, but “Neighbors” is also more tightly constructed than these kinds of comedies usually are, coming in at less than 100 minutes. And there’s a theme of sorts too—having to do with the mutual envy between the young and the settled—making the movie surprisingly poignant as well as side-splitting.

We Are the Best!

After spending the past decade making depressing social dramas, Lukas Moodysson returns to the cheerier, youthful mode of earlier films like “Together” and “Show Me Love” with this comedy about three Stockholm adolescent girls who form a punk band in the early 1980s. Based on a graphic novel by Moodysson’s wife, Coco—drawn from her own experiences—“We Are the Best!” offers a series of vivid re-creations of the past, barely held together by anything like a plot. The only real suspense is whether the girls’ on-again-off-again friendship will survive long enough for them to play their first gig. Moodysson gets how emotionally complicated kids’ lives can be, and how amid all the giggle fits, snack runs and arguments over bands and boys, these kids are forging their own ideas of what’s important.

Extras: A pair of featurettes delve into the making of the movie and its music.

The Rover

“Animal Kingdom” writer-director David Michod returns with the very different “The Rover,” starring Guy Pearce as a sullen loner who seeks revenge on a group of bandits in a bleak, futuristic Australia. Robert Pattinson plays a low-level gang member pressed into service by the hero. “The Rover” is more pensive and hushed than most post-apocalyptic action pictures. It’s the kind of movie where the fights and chases are less exciting than the philosophical conversations about whether any kind of divine or earthly authority figure is still around in this bleak landscape to render judgment on its inhabitants.

HAVE EGGS, WILL TRAVEL

WE SIZE UP THE GRAB-AND-GO BREAKFAST SANDWICHES AT THE EASTMAN EGG COMPANY

By Ernest Wilkins | REDEYE

Thanks to a combination of long nights out covering music—and the need for relief the next day after overindulging during those long nights—I’ve come to know my way around a good breakfast sandwich. In my opinion, Chicago suffers from a dearth of standouts, either making a poor attempt at a New York deli-style egg sandwich on a bagel or serving up some kind of overpriced, hoity-toity situation with arugula and aioli. All I want in this world is a good option to soak up the remnants of booze in my stomach. Is that too much to ask?

The folks behind The Eastman Egg Company apparently heard my prayers, and last week, they opened their first brick-and-mortar location, an offshoot of the food truck that launched last summer. I made my way to the Loop storefront to see if they could solve my morning hunger pangs once and for all.

The lineup: On my opening-day visit, Eastman featured seven sandwiches ($6-$9 each), including one slider-size option ($4.50), an egg with cheddar and salsa verde on ciabatta bread called The Rookie. The menu is rounded out with coffee from Sparrow Coffee Roasters, teas and juices. For those looking for something lighter (who are you, by the way?) there are also two yogurt parfaits ($5) available. Since it’s scientifically impossible to conquer a Level 4 hangover with a yogurt parfait, I chose to ignore them. Instead, I ordered four sandwiches and brought them back to the office to divide the spoils with my co-workers, because I’m a nice guy, that’s why.

The breads: For those who might scoff at the lack of traditional breakfast sandwich breads or bagels on the menu, general manager Drew Davis said that the choice of carbs (which come from La Farine Bakery in Logan Square) is deliberate. “We wanted to push the boundaries of what people considered a egg sandwich,” he said. That means airy ciabatta-style buns and—clutch your pearls and hold on tight—pretzel rolls. “Why not?” Davis said. I’m applauding the bravado; the ciabatta rolls have a great chew and softness and are perfect for the heartily topped sandwiches.

The fillings: All four sandwiches I tried featured scrambled eggs that were on point—dense enough, but not hard to chew. The bacon on The Doc sandwich (which also featured egg and white cheddar, $7) was thick and smoky without being tough. When it came to The Crown (egg, chorizo patty, avocado, salsa verde and Egmont, a cheddar-like cheese, $9) and The Captain (egg, pork sausage and pepper jack cheese, $6), both the chorizo patty and the sausage patty were devoid of spice. I’m not asking for Ass in the Tub-level heat, but a little bit would have given the sandwich a much-needed flavor boost. Luckily, I keep hot sauce in my desk. My favorite (and the overall winner among my co-workers) was the vegetarian-friendly Fairfax made with egg, Egmont cheese, bell pepper, spinach and Green Goddess sauce ($6). That sauce—which Davis said is Greek yogurt mixed with a puree of basil, cilantro, mint, extra-virgin olive oil and salt—had us raving and really tied the entire sandwich together. Add to that the fluffy egg, the crunch of the peppers and the slight bitterness of the sauteed spinach and you’ve got a meat-free option that’s as decadent as any pork-packed sandwich out there.

The bottom line: Eastman definitely made a good first impression. Here’s hoping that it will be a leader in the next wave of breakfast sandwich spots in Chicago. I’ll definitely be back.

HOT RIGHT NOW

5 SPOTS TO KEEP ON YOUR RADAR THIS WEEKEND

Highline Bar & Lounge

169 W. Kinzie St. 312-553-2742

This new bar in the shadow of the Merchandise Mart marks Four Corners Tavern Group's (Benchmark, Gaslight, Trellis) first location in River North. The 10,000-square-foot space is part lounge, part sports bar, with 20 TVs and sustenance such as sriracha chicken sliders ($11 for three), fish tacos ($14) and a short rib-and-pork belly burger topped with apricot jam and brie ($13).

Parlor Pizza Bar

108 N. Green St. 312-600-6090

Michael Bisbee and Tim Hendricks (Stout Barrel House & Galley, Cedar Hotel) have debuted their long-awaited West Loop pizzeria. Here's hoping the weather is nice enough this weekend to dig into Neapolitan-style pies on the patio and second-floor roof.

Barrelman Tavern

6001 N. Paulina St. 773-654-3110

This whiskey-focused sports bar in Edgewater opened this week, debuting a menu of dark spir-its and both draft and bottled beers. The whiskey theme extends to the decor as well, with plenty of wood accents and tables made from barrels. Five large TVs take up a whole wall and will be tuned to the weekend's Chicago games.

Umami Burger

1480 N. Milwaukee Ave. 773-423-2005

The West Coast burger chain debuted its first Chicago location in Wicker Park on Thursday. Look for decadent burgers with toppings such as truffle aioli, beer cheddar and bacon lardons with draft brews and fun cocktails such as the rye-spiked Blackberry Swizzle ($11) to wash 'em down with.

Fat Rice

2957 W. Diversey Ave. 773-661-9170

If you love this eclectic Logan Square restaurant but can't stomach the wait, here's the answer to your piri piri chicken-laced prayers: Fat Rice is now on opentable.com. Only a portion of the dining room is available for advanced reservations, though, so walk-ins are still welcome.

#GetFested

Each week, we're issuing a photo challenge to help you make the most of your fest weekend. Complete the challenge and tag it #GetFested on Instagram for a chance to have your photo appear in RedEye. Last week, we wanted to see your Riot Fest photos, and we love this fish eye lens selfie from @choolian at The Dandy Warhols set. This weekend, show us something delicious you're eating or drinking—Taco Fest, we're looking at you. And don't forget the hashtag!

PLANNER

SEPT. 19-21

By Kate Bernot | REDEYE

With Riot Fest in the rearview mirror, the season for big summer music festivals has ended. Just because you've already Lolla'd and Pitchfork'd and Rioted doesn't mean there aren't a few more weeks of fest season left, though. Take it down a notch this weekend with smaller, indie-minded festivals including Design Harvest, Andersonville City Made Fest and the Festival of Joyous Rebellion, or get your eat and drink on at Logan Square Beer Fest and Sam Adams' Lakeview Taco Fest. We're in the twilight of summer, kids—make it count. KBERNOT@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEEATDRINK

DESIGN HARVEST

When: 11 a.m.-8 p.m. Saturday and 11 a.m.-6 p.m. Sunday

Where: Grand Avenue between Damen Avenue and Wood Street

How much: $5 suggested donation

Don't miss: Pinterest freaks rejoice: this annual celebration of local home and garden designers returns to West Town with how-to workshops, expert panels and plenty of home goods for sale. Browse the locally made design objects while sipping Leinenkugel beers, snacking on food from area vendors and listening to live music curated by The Hideout.

ANDERSONVILLE
CITY MADE FEST

When: noon-9 p.m. Saturday and Sunday

Where: Clark Street between Argyle Street and Carmen Avenue

How much: $5 suggested donation

Don't miss: If it isn't from Chicago, you won't find it at City Made Fest. Only Chicago-made products—including beer, food, music and design objects—will be on hand for the two-day celebration of local artisans. Listen to a diverse line-up of music, including Americana/rock band Sure Fire Groove (3:30 p.m. Saturday), hip-hop/singer-songwriter duo Jason Maek & Zaena (5:15 p.m. Saturday) and jazz quintet Brent Kimbrough & Company (7 p.m. Sunday). Sip beers from Argus, Half Acre, Finch's, Metropolitan, Lake Effect and other Chicago brewers.

FESTIVAL OF JOYOUS REBELLION

When: 6-11 p.m. Saturday

Where: The Hideout (1354 W. Wabansia Ave.)

How much: $25 general admission; $100 VIP admission; tickets available at peoplesaction.org/festival-of-joyous-rebellion

Don't miss: Part music and performance fest, part progressive political meet-up, this second annual festival organized by the National People's Action Campaign brings together activists, speakers and artists including author John Nichols, radio commentator Jim Hightower and activist Ai-jen Poo.

LOGAN SQUARE
BEER FEST

When: Saturday, first session: 1-4 p.m.; second session: 5-8 p.m.

Where: Logan Square Auditorium (2539 N. Kedzie Blvd.)

How much: $45; tickets available at logansquarebeerfestival.com

Don't miss: Now in its second year, this festival at the Logan Square Auditorium has added a second session. Twenty-plus participating breweries—including Three Floyds, Half Acre, Penrose and Transient Artisan Ales—will supply more than 50 beers, many of which will be cask-conditioned, collaborations or barrel-aged offerings. A Ball Park hot dog truck will offer free hot dogs, and Lagunitas founder Tony Magee's band, Alice Drinks the Kool-Aid, will perform at the afternoon session.

SAM ADAMS
LAKEVIEW TACO FEST

When: noon-10 p.m. Saturday and Sunday

Where: Southport Avenue between Addison and Roscoe streets

How much: $5 suggested donation

Don't miss: The second year of this taco fest means double the vendors—14 total—who will each put a spin on the Mexican dish. Expect pulled short rib and grilled portobello tacos from Cafe El Tapatio; coffee-rubbed steak and tequila shrimp tacos from D.S. Tequila Company; chicken, beef and pork tacos from Taco Joint; carnitas and lemongrass tofu tacos from Si Fu Chinese Latin Kitchen, and more varieties for purchase. While you're snacking, listen to performances from rockabilly band Amazing Heeby Jeebies (3:30 p.m. Saturday), 90s hip-hop cover act The Hot Sauce Committee (3:30 p.m. Saturday), pop rockers Your Villain, My Hero (5:45 p.m. Sunday) and others.

Quick and dirty advice: Fall edition

Anna Pulley

redeye@tribune.com
@annapulley

Happy fall, folks! It's time for turning leaves, pumpkin spice lattes and the fall edition of quick and dirty advice. Now tie your scarf on loosely and let's rumble.

I'm a guy who's into getting married and having kids, preferably in the next few years. I don't want to waste my time pursuing relationships that won't go anywhere. How do I advertise this without seeming clingy or desperate?

Say what you said in the first sentence. Throw that into your online dating profile, near the top for lazy people who don't read all the way to the end. Lots of women want to get married and have kids! It's not "clingy" to have a desire and an end goal. To that end, you still probably will end up having to crack a few eggs before you find your wedding omelet (or however that expression goes).

Is it rude to ask a new person I'm dating to get checked for STDs before I sleep with them?

It's certainly within your rights to ask, but it's a very delicate subject. Try offering to get tested together, and emphasize that his or her sexual health and well-being are important to you.

My boyfriend and I never go out anymore! All he wants to do is watch Netflix and sit on the couch. But hello, Chicago is a great city and it's going to get freaking cold soon and I want to take advantage before the weather makes it unbearable. How can I convince him to take me out once in a while?

Take him out instead. Institute a "date night" and then plan an outing that would be fun for both of you. If he needs further convincing, appeal to his ego ("I want to show off my hot boyfriend"), or his unfulfilled wishes ("Remember how you said you always wanted to do XYZ? Well, I got us tickets") or his rationality ("Kitchen Nightmares' still will be in your queue after we go to the indoor batting cages at Sluggers.") And honestly, the weather thing is a compelling point. Put that in your relationship PowerPoint.

Millennium Park in the fall

How do I attract a rich guy?

Be self-serving and shallow. So, you know, you're mostly there.

I am incredibly insecure and have a perverse need for everyone to like me. How do I change this? It seems so ingrained in my personality.

You have to start liking yourself first. In the meantime, fake it till you become it.

The classic black pump makes a comeback

Chicago Tribune

When Victoria Beckham strides into September wearing them, you know that single-sole black pumps are officially back.

Not that they ever left the starting lineup of most professional women dressing for the office five days a week. But celebrities and fashionistas had benched them in favor of nude and metallic platforms and booties the past few years, said Meghan Cleary, a footwear columnist for The Hollywood Reporter and author of "The Perfect Fit: What Your Shoes Say About You" and "Shoe Are You?"

So far this September, Cleary has observed more than the usual seasonal resurgence of black pumps. She cites the dark and edgy palette of singer Lorde as well as fatigue with increasingly outlandish heels, colors and price tags as influencers.

"Black pumps look fresher for fall," said Julia Kalachnikoff, accessories director for Lucky magazine. "While a nude pump certainly has its place in a woman's wardrobe I think a black pump can really anchor a look in a way that nude doesn't."

To avoid a fusty bureaucrat look with black pumps, avoid moderation. Choose either a high or kitten heel. Consider points of interest such as an ankle strap or a d'Orsay style, with a cutout at the arch of the foot, Kalachnikoff said.

I AIN'T AFRAID OF NO DOUGHNUT

By Gwendolyn Purdom | REDEYE

Apparently, Ecto Cooler wasn't enough. In honor of this year's 30th anniversary of "Ghostbusters" release, Krispy Kreme has announced it'll be adding two special edition pastries to its menu from Sept. 29 to Oct. 31, People reports: a doughnut inspired by Slimer and a Stay Puft Marshmallow Man—much smaller than the movie's version—doughnut, filled, of course, with marshmallow cream. In short, the bakery might as well call itself the Keymaster to our hearts.

But the 'Busters aren't the only movie or TV show to celebrate a big birthday this year, which has got us thinking: What edible treat would we like to see released to celebrate these beloved classics?

GPURDOM@TRIBUNE.COM | @GWENPURDOM

'FORREST GUMP' CELEBRATING 20 YEARS

A box of chocolates

We're relatively certain we could pick up a version of this at Bubba Gump Shrimp Co.'s gift shop right now. But in the interest of avoiding the tourist swarm of Navy Pier at all costs, we'd prefer these be made available elsewhere, with movie-appropriate flavors like Ping Pong Peanut Butter, Unrequited Love Nougat and Lieutenant Dan-che de Leche.

'PULP FICTION' CELEBRATING 20 YEARS

Royales with cheese

Because, obviously.

'LAW & ORDER: SVU' CELEBRATING 15 YEARS

Highly caffeinated coffee

Everybody knows the best episodes of "SVU" are the ones in which Benson and Stabler go undercover as a swinging couple/hooker and john/punked out rave kids and knock back a few cocktails whilst tricking perps into spilling their secrets. But that only happens once in a blue USA marathon. A more fitting tribute? Espresso, because you know the dynamic duo won't sleep till they've nabbed the bad guy.

'FRIENDS' CELEBRATING 20 YEARS

Thanksgiving turkeys

For a show with 10 seasons, "Friends" must have had 37* Thanksgiving episodes. Not that we're complaining. Television doesn't get much better than Joey getting his head stuck in poultry. The folks at Butterball would be a flock of idiots not to pitch this partnership. Potential tagline: Could this Thanksgiving turkey BE any more delicious? You're welcome. *A gross exaggeration

'THE COSBY SHOW' CELEBRATING 30 YEARS

Jell-O pudding snack packs

Aside from the fact that Dr. Cliff Huxtable himself was the longtime spokesman for pudding products, we can just imagine a storyline in which Vanessa got herself into a jam at school using snack packs as currency in an ill-advised trade. Cliff would help her resolve the issue with a hilarious heart-to-heart, Clair would offer her sassy approval and Rudy would provide adorable comic relief.

SORRY, LADIES OF TAMPA

"Mike's" sequel just lost a little magic. Indiewire reports Matthew McConaughey won't be back for "Magic Mike XXL," the follow-up to 2012's star-studded stripper show. Director Gregory Jacobs said the film will be "very different" from its predecessor, adding, "It's a road trip movie." Hey, as long as some super sexy stripteasing still goes down, count us in for the ride.

What. A. Tease.

J.J. Abrams' Bad Robot production company released Thursday a short video teasing footage of the Millennium Falcon from "Star Wars: Episode VII," and just as our nerdy hearts were picking up lightspeed, John Williams' "Star Wars" soundtrack gets drowned out by Hans Zimmer's theme from "The Dark Knight" and Batman's Tumbler is revealed on the underbelly of Han Solo's ride. The Easter egg was a nod to "Batman vs. Superman: Dawn of Justice" director Zach Snyder's tweeting a photo a few days ago of a stormtrooper being arrested by Gotham police. *Gasp.* Crossover?!?!

Live from New York ... it's Darrell Hammond!

"SNL's" longest running cast member will be back this season in a different role: announcer. Hammond replaces Don Pardo, the voice of "SNL" for 38 seasons who died last month. Hammond is not strictly a newcomer to the gig—in the past, he occasionally filled in for Pardo, though viewers might not have noticed a difference as he impersonated Pardo's distinctive baritone. According to Entertainment Weekly, Hammond will devise his own version of the title announcements for the upcoming Season 40.

Grumpy Cat won't be silenced

After "Glee's" Jane Lynch peaced out of Lifetime's "Grumpy Cat's Worst Christmas Ever," "Parks and Rec's" Aubrey Plaza has graciously stepped in to give voice to "everyone's favorite curmudgeon and Internet sensation." There's still some time before the show airs Nov. 29 for Aubrey to turn Scrooge too, so our vote's still on Tom Hardy as Bane to step into Grumpy Cat's paws.

Orange Is the New Grey's Anatomy

The cast of "Grey's Anatomy" (which is still a thing, BTW) got a momentary makeover, with the doctors of Seattle Grace Mercy West channeling the women of Litchfield Correctional Facility. The photo was posted by Ellen Pompeo on her WhoSay page, with the caption "blue is the new black." Though, "new" might be a bit of a stretch, considering the show is entering its 11th (!!) season.
